
The congress will introduce some of the numerous, seemingly similar and yet rather different, schools of thought, born within China and outside of it that have developed through several millennia and have become an integral part of the medical approaches available to patients worldwide.

We shall learn how East Asian Medicine spread from its original cradle to the whole world and how different interpretation and clinical application have enriched it and allowed it to establish itself in so many different countries and cultural contexts and groups.

At the congress, internationally renowned experts will illustrate the theoretical and clinical applications of some schools of thought born out of an apparent common view of the human body, its place in the world, the conditions that foster health and, on the other hand, those that lead to disease.
